47th INFANTRY DIVISION

HERALDRY OF THE SHOULDER PATCH

The circular background is representative of the shield of Thor—god of Thunder—god of strength, the great defender, a victor in battle. The blue is for Infantry from which came the first units of the National Guard of Minnesota and North Dakota. The red is for Artillery, the second type arm to be organized in the National Guard of Minnesota and North Dakota.

The white Viking's helmet is symbolic of the Viking warriors; brave and fearless men of the North of invincible courage, early explorers, valiant and heroic in war, brilliant organizers of government in peace time. Units of the 47th Infantry Division come from the two midwestern states of Minnesota and North Dakota—formerly known as the Dakota Territory—pioneered, founded, and built by descendants of the Vikings, loyal sons and daughters of Scandinavian birth.

TO: All Members of the 47th "Viking" Division:

I am indeed proud to have the fine 47th Division as a part of my command. I have watched you from the day of your arrival at Camp Rucker and have admired very much the way in which all of you go about your job. The spirit, esprit, and character of the 47th Division are such that it promises to be second to none. The efficient, business-like manner in which you have handled all tasks assigned and conducted your training to date gives me great confidence in your future as a part of our Armed Forces team needed to insure the security of our nation.

My best wishes go with each of you day by day.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN R. HODGE
Lieutenant General, USA
Commanding

LIEUTENANT GENERAL JOHN R. HODGE

Commanding General, Third Army

JOHN REED HODGE was born at Golconda, Ill., on June 12, 1893. He attended the University of Illinois and was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Infantry Reserve on Aug. 15, 1917.

In October, 1917, he received a Regular Army commission and in 1918 went to France with the 61st Infantry Regiment, serving in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensives and in the Anould and St. Die sectors, during World War I. After the war he became professor of Military Science and Tactics at Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, later attending and graduating from the Army's Infantry School at Ft. Benning, Ga.; the Command and General Staff School, Ft. Leavenworth, Kans.; Army War College, Washington, D.C., and Air Corps Tactical School, Maxwell Field, Ala. In 1936 he was assigned to the War Department General Staff at Washington, later serving as Chief of Staff for the VII Corps at Birmingham, Ala.

During World War II he rose successively from Assistant Division Commander, 25th Division, to Commanding General, Americal Division, 43rd Infantry Division and, finally, XXIV Corps. From 1942 to 1948 in those commands he took part in campaigns in Gaudaleanal, Bougainville, New Georgia, Leyte and Okinawa. His XXIV Corps occupied Korea south of the 38th parallel after V-J Day and, as tactical commander, General Hodge also served as Military Governor.

Returning to the U.S. in 1948, General Hodge took command of V Corps at Ft. Bragg, N.C., serving both as Corps and Post Commander there until he was named Third Army Commander in 1950, with headquarters at Ft. McPherson, Ga.

In 1948 he was awarded an Honorary Degree as Doctor of Law, from Seoul National University in Korea.

TO: All Present And Former Members Of The "Viking" Division Wherever They May Be

The comradeship between men who have served together in the Armed Forces differs from all those formed elsewhere.

Mutual sharing of discomfort, hardship and dangers and mutual effort for a common cause establish a bond which is never completely broken.

May this book be a permanent and pleasant reminder of that comradeship in which we have worked together to assume our fair share of those duties and responsibilities of citizenship which go hand in hand with all the blessings which that citizenship bestows upon us. Your whole-hearted efforts are creating a great fighting division ready for any emergency and I am proud to be its commander.

Many of those who started with us have left for other assignments. To them, and to all of you, my best wishes for the future.

Sincerely,

Norman E. Hendrickson

NORMAN E. HENDRICKSON
Major General, United States Army
Commanding

MAJOR GENERAL NORMAN E. HENDRICKSON

Commanding General, 47th Infantry Division

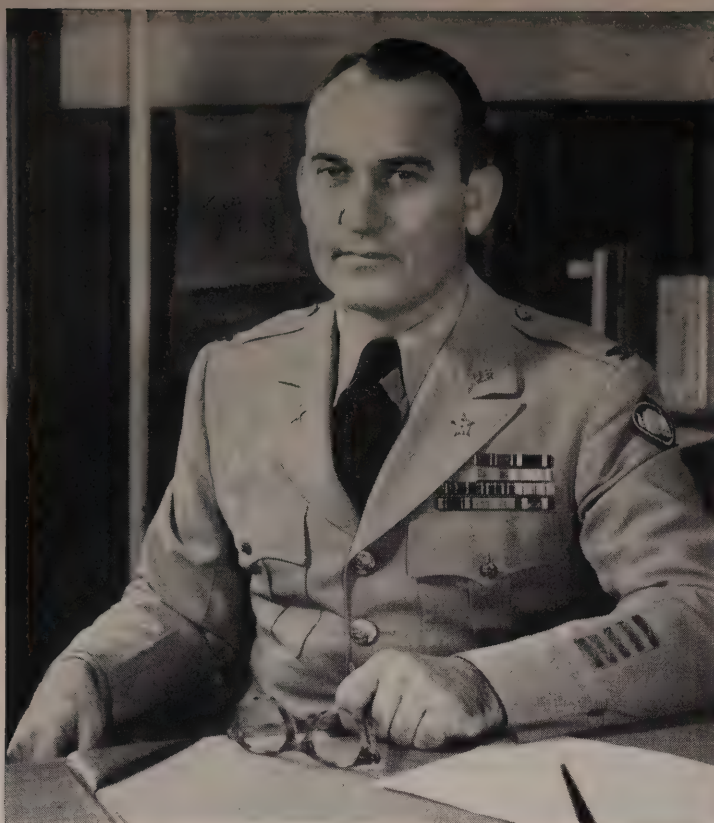

MAJOR GENERAL NORMAN E. HENDRICKSON, Commanding General, 47th Infantry Division, enlisted as a private in the Minnesota National Guard in 1916, saw service on the Mexican Border, earned a commission during World War I, and served in France as an artillery officer, 151st FA, 42nd Inf. Div. Following World War I he returned to inactive status and remained with Minnesota National Guard units until inducted in 1941. During World War II he was Chief of Staff of the 34th Infantry Division during the North African and Italian campaigns. He returned to the United States in 1944 and then saw further service as Chief of Staff of the IX Army Corps in the Pacific before relief from active duty in June 1946. He was appointed Commanding General of the newly-formed 47th Division in September of that year and was Federally recognized as a Major General on September 15, 1946. He served on the War Department General Staff National Guard Policy Committee from 1946 to 1948, and on the Civilian Components Policy Board in 1949 and 1950. An industrial engineer in civilian life, the General makes his home at 5101 10th Avenue South, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

BRIGADIER GENERAL PHILIP C. BETTENBURG

Assistant Division Commander, 47th Infantry Division

B RIGADIER GENERAL PHILIP C. BETTENBURG, Assistant Division Commander, 47th Infantry Division, enlisted in the Student Army Training Corps in World War I. He was a private in the Minnesota National Guard in 1919. He was commissioned a First Lieutenant, Infantry, in 1921 and by the time of his induction into Federal Service in February 1941 had attained the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, as the Assistant Chief of Staff, G-4, 34th Infantry Division. During World War II he served as an Infantry Regimental Commander in North Africa and Europe. Following the close of hostilities he was a member of the U.S. Group Control Council in Germany. He was relieved from active duty in November 1945. With the reactivation of the National Guard after World War II, the General was selected for the position of Assistant Division Commander of the 47th Infantry Division. He was Federally recognized as a Brigadier General on September 15, 1946. An engineer and architect in civilian life, the General makes his home at 757 So. Snelling Avenue, St. Paul, Minnesota.

COLONEL HARLAN D. BYNELL

Chief of Staff

COLONEL HARLAN D. BYNELL, Chief of Staff, 47th Infantry "Viking" Division has been a member of the National Guard for over 25 years, beginning as an enlisted man in the 151st Field Artillery. Was inducted in February 1941 and went along as the S-3 of that Regiment. In October 1941 he became the Assistant G-4, Headquarters 34th Division and when the 34th Division landed in Algiers in November 1942, he was along in that capacity. In 1943 he joined Allied Force Headquarters as the Executive Officer to G-4. During occupation of Tunisia Campaign, he became the Executive Officer to G-4 of Headquarters 15th Army Group, the organization that planned and executed the Sicilian Campaign. In December 1943 he was recalled to the United States to become a member of the Staff and faculty of the Army Navy Staff College. In December 1944, because of his knowledge of joint operations, he was assigned to Commander in Chief, Pacific Ocean Area, a Joint Command. Returning to the United States in November 1945, he was appointed the Assistant Adjutant General of Minnesota, and was Secretary of the Committee on Organization that drew up the plan for the re-activation of the Minnesota National Guard. When the 47th Infantry Division was activated on September 15, 1946, he was appointed the Chief of Staff. He is a graduate of Command and General Staff College, Army Navy Staff College and Army Industrial College.

G-1 Personnel and Administration

LT. COL. JOHN S. IRONS
G-1

AS THE Assistant Chief of Staff, G-1, Lt. Colonel Irons concerns himself with the personnel of the Division. Both in combat and in garrison his responsibility is the soldier as an individual. He supervises the Adjutant General Dept.; establishes procedure for replacement of personnel; and carries out the policy for decorations, citations, rewards and punishment. He is responsible for establishing the policy for leaves of absence and furloughs; religious, recreational and welfare activities; the Army postal service; and reports on unit strength, casualties and prisoners of war, etc. He advises the commander on the morale of the personnel. He is charged with the collection and disposition of stragglers and prisoners of war. He is responsible for the internal arrangement of Division Headquarters, sanitation as it affects the members of the command, and maintenance of law and order. He supervises relations with civil governments and civilians in a theatre of operation, including initial establishment and operation of the military government or martial law. He supervises matters concerning personnel who are prisoners in the enemy hands, and he is responsible for graves registration, service and burials.

G-2 Military Intelligence

AS ASSISTANT Chief of Staff, G-2, Lt. Colonel Campbell keeps the commander informed regarding the enemy's situation and capabilities. His work concerns intelligence and counter-intelligence, and with the assistance of intelligence officers of units under his control he is able to collect, compile and evaluate all information of the enemy's capabilities. He supervises the collection of information by radio position-finding and interception methods. He is responsible for the procuring and distributing of all maps and coordinates requests for aerial photographs. He is responsible for all censorship, both of postal matters and the work of news correspondents. He makes plans for the reception of foreign visitors at headquarters and the escorting of the same. He is charged with the dissemination of false information to the enemy, obstruction of enemy propaganda, and refuting enemy propaganda among the troops or the civil population of the theatre of operations.

Operations and Training

G-3

LT. COL. LEON H. HAGEN
G-3

AS ASSISTANT Chief of Staff, G-3, Lt. Colonel Hagen is responsible for organization, training and combat operations. He coordinates and prepares plans for the training of units and individuals, organization of schools of instruction, selection of training sites and firing and bombing ranges, the publication of training directives, programs and orders. In combat, he is charged with supervision of all operations, including tactical and strategic studies and estimates. He must study the tactical situation continually, including location, morale and capabilities of the troops, need for replacements, terrain and weather conditions and the status of equipment and supplies. He prepares recommendations, reports and operations orders based on the tactical situation. He is responsible for reconnaissance and security measures, troop movements, tactical employment of units, defense of communication lines and tactical measures to preserve secrecy and effect surprise.

Supply and Transportation

G-4

AS ASSISTANT Chief of Staff, G-4, Lt. Colonel Johnson is charged with the preparation of policies for and the supervision of supply execution, evacuation and hospitalization, transportation service, and other related subjects. He is responsible for advising the commander relative to the extent of the administrative support that can be given to any proposed strategic or tactical line of action. He is also responsible for the procurement, storage and distribution of all supplies; the location of supply; evacuation and maintenance establishments; transportation of supplies by land, air, and water; construction and maintenance of roads, trails, docks and air-dromes; maintenance of equipment; recommendations for allocation of small arms, ammunition and anti-tank mines; traffic control; construction; operation and maintenance of utilities; and other facilities relating to supply, shelter, transportation, and hospitalization, but exclusive of fortifications; evacuation and hospitalization of men; salvage; collection and disposal of captured supplies; and priority of expenditure.

Queen of Battle

AN INFANTRY Division—Queen of Battle. Mission: To close with the enemy by fire and maneuver in order to capture or destroy him; or to repel his assault by fire and close combat.

Your Infantry Division is the basis of organization of the field forces. It is the smallest unit that is composed of all the essential ground arms and services and which can conduct, by its own means, operations of general importance. It can strike or penetrate effectively, maneuver readily, and absorb reinforcing units easily. It can act alone or as part of a higher unit.

An Infantry Division derives its combat value from its ability to combine the actions of the various arms and services to maintain combat over a considerable period of time.

Of course, as most of us know, an Infantry Division is not composed entirely of foot troops. There's almost every component of the Army Ground Forces within the division—artillery, engineers, tanks, AAA, signal corps, medics, reconnaissance troops, quartermaster, ordnance, and other special troops. Briefly an Infantry Division is an entity in itself, capable of subsisting and fighting on its own.

Yes, you can rightfully say that, we are the first to occupy territory by our own sweat, blood, and support.

The "Viking" Division, like other United States infantry divisions, is a triangular division. This means that in our Division we have three combat teams, each composed of one infantry regiment and one battalion of artillery. Each team is supported by a company of engineers, a company of medics, and the division's various special troops.

The Infantry Regiment is made up of three combat battalions and one provisional battalion. In each infantry combat battalion there are three rifle companies, one heavy weapons company, and a headquarters company. The provisional battalion consists of a medium tank, heavy mortar, medical, service, and headquarters companies.

Our Division Artillery consists of five battalions—three light field artillery battalions, one medium and an anti-aircraft artillery battalion. A field artillery battalion is composed of five batteries, three firing batteries, a headquarters battery, and a service battery.

Attached to your Infantry Division are a battalion of engineers, a battalion of tanks, a signal company, a quartermaster company, a band, an ordnance company, a military police company, a reconnaissance troop, a medical battalion, and a headquarters company.

While your Infantry Division primarily moves by foot, the mechanized strength of the unit is immense. All the field pieces and heavy weapons are motor-drawn. The artillery and special troops move by truck.

The fire power of the Division is tremendous. With thousands of small arms, hundreds of machine guns and mortars, plus tanks and field artillery, the Division can concentrate thousands of pounds of ammunition on a specific area in the shortest possible time.

An Infantry Division is usually given a specific objective to take or a definite area to hold, although the battle tactics may differ depending on the mission. Its battle front may vary in size from a few hundred yards to several miles, again depending on the mission at the time.

In a military campaign, an Infantry Division gives and receives active cooperation of all branches of the Army and the Air Force and frequently the Navy.

Numerous examples of this cooperation came out of World War II, but the latest examples can be seen in the Korean campaign, wherein the usual tactics are to have the Air Force plaster the target with thousands of tons of bombs; next in the case of a coastal objective would be to have the Navy's heavy guns bombard it, and while all this was in progress the Infantry would move in and take over.

Yes, quite properly, the Infantry has been called the "Queen of Battle." Since ancient times the Infantry has carried the brunt of battles. Throughout recorded history it has always been the foot soldiers who captured and held ground. All this and the latest fighting in Korea, proves that the Infantry is the one indispensable branch of the Army.

It is not easy to be a good Infantryman. The training is the most rigorous, the life is often monotonous, and seldom is there any glamour or glory attached to being a foot soldier. But there is a lot of inner satisfaction in knowing that you are doing a tough job to the best of your ability. When the day comes that you have to do battle you can take a fierce and sincere pride that you are ready both mentally and physically to take on the enemy and defeat him.

As your Commanding General Norman E. Hendrickson has so often said "We are yust the fellers who can do it, too."

HISTORY

OF THE VIKINGS

M. K. K. K.

History of the 47th

THE 47th "Viking" Infantry Division is one of the youngest outfits in the American armed forces, yet it has a proud and victorious lineage stretching back 1,000 years.

For these modern-day Vikings, though not formally organized as the 47th until 1946, are the heirs of action-packed centuries of history—from the bold explorations of the Norsemen 500 years before Columbus, to the United Nations' unprecedented defense of collective security in Korea.

Leif Erickson and his crew of seafaring soldiers who sailed and marched, some historians relate, into the heart of the North American continent while Europe was still groping through the Dark Ages, were the forebears of today's Vikings in more ways than paternity.

These Vikings of old were explorers and colonizers and founders of governments—along with being the most feared and respected fighting men in the war-wracked world of their day.

Today's men of the Viking Division have a much more varied lineage than Leif Erickson's band of Norsemen. The 47th is now an all-American Division, boasting men from every one of the 48 states, all three territories (Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico), and several foreign countries.

The sons of Scandinavian heritage as well as the sons of other proud lineages from the states of Minnesota and North Dakota where the 47th was organized now soldier alongside buddies with names as varied as "Curtis, Decker, DePalma, Domagalski, Engels, Feinauer, Fernandes, Flynn, French, Galla, Genrich, Groetz, Hale, Hamilton, Hansen" (to take one roster at random).

As the Viking roster now welds men of richly varying backgrounds, so our history also is fused of variegated strands. In a broad sense, the battles of free men in all countries and all centuries are a part of our Division history. Compressed in more formal military terms, however, it is proper to trace the Viking Division's historical background from the Indian wars of 1859-1864 down through World War II campaigns in both hemispheres.

The "Pioneer Guards" were organized at St. Paul, Minnesota, in 1856, the year before Minnesota Territory achieved statehood. Thus these Guards were ready for action when the Sioux went on the rampage pillaging pioneers' homes. These Indian wars in Minnesota remain among the most bloody and important in the long saga of the settlement of America. They were decisive in transforming this part of our continent from a hunting ground to a land of enduring pioneer homes and farms.

These Pioneer Guards were the founding fathers of 1st Regiment, Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, parent organization of the 136th and 135th Infantry Regiments of later fame. Company A of the 1st Minnesota Volunteers was formed from the Pioneer Guards direct.

Forebears of today's 135th Infantry Regiment were the first to respond to President Lincoln's call for 75,000 volunteers at the start of the Civil War. News of the fall of Fort Sumter reached the Nation's capital on the evening of April 3, 1861. On the morning of April 14, Governor Alexander Ramsey of Minnesota Territory called on Secretary of War Cameron and offered 1,000 men.

The tall, lanky men from the Paul Bunyan country became a legend for rough-and-ready fighting and endurance in the course of the 4-year war to preserve the Union. They took part in no less than 23 battles, not to mention lesser engagements and skirmishes. They marched hundreds upon hundreds of miles—and these were no "motor marches". They subsisted much of the time on salt pork and hardtack. Their pay was $11 a month.

Yet these were the men who in 1863 were credited with turning the tide at the Battle of Gettysburg in a fearless charge from which only one man in five emerged unscathed.

"On the fateful day of July 2, 1863, the outcome of the Civil War stood precariously in the balance," writes a historian of that epoch.

"The Confederate forces under Longstreet and Hill forced the Third Union Corps under Sickles into disorderly retreat. At that moment, General Hancock, with his dashing horsemanship, galloped up," the account continues.

He ordered the 1st Minnesota Volunteers into the breach. The regiment, already much reduced by its wearing campaigns, suffered 82-percent casualties in the charge, 215 of its remaining 262 officers and men falling dead or wounded.

The motto of the Regiment, "To the Last Man," was born on that day. The crest of the 135th bears the crossed bars of the Confederate flag, worn proudly by Vikings of both Fort Snelling, Minn.

Somewhere in France

North and South, united now in a worldwide mission to preserve the union of free peoples.

The emblem of the 136th also took shape in this early period. The 2nd Minnesota, sister regiment to the 1st Volunteers and progenitor of today's 136th Infantry Regiment, met up in Kentucky and Tennessee with the legend of the "bearcat," a creature combining the ferocity and tenacity of both bear and cat. A "bearcat rampant" claws the air on the 136th crest, with the motto "Rex Montis" (Latin for "King of the Mountain") enscribed under his hind paws. The Bearcats fought through mountains and jungles in World War II to help wrest the South Pacific from the Japanese warlords.

The artillery started the roll of its caissons through the annals of Minnesota military history in the Pioneer days, too.

The 1st Regiment, Minnesota Heavy Artillery, was organized in 1864. Some of its members had served even before this in quelling the Indian uprisings.

The Minnesota Heavy Artillery sired, directly or indirectly, such famous outfits as the 151st Field, which fired its way to initial glory with the 42nd "Rainbow" Division in France in World War I, and the 175th, which had the honor and good aim of firing Hitler's first taste of American artillery in World War II.

These hard-firing outfits, the first overseas in World War II, gave the 34th "Red Bull" Division the unsurpassed record of more than a million and 300 thousand rounds launched in the relentless two-year push through Africa and Italy.

Then there are the anti-aircraft units, grouped in the modern Viking Division as the 256th Battalion, succeeding the three anti-aircraft regiments of World War II—the 215th, 216th, and 217th CA (AAA).

Another modern development is the Tank Battalion. In the Viking Division it's the 194th, survivors of Bataan and the Japanese death march. The tank companies from the three infantry regiments train and live right with the 194th, the men of the armored units calling themselves "The Tankers".

The triangular organization of the Division is completed by the 164th Infantry Regiment, the North Dakota wing of the original Minnesota-North Dakota National Guard Vikings who rolled to Camp Rucker, Alabama, on federal call on January 16, 1951. The 164th, with the Americal Division in World War II, hit the Solomons, Leyte, and Guadalcanal.

North Dakota's artillery contribution is the 188th FA Battalion, offshoot of the 185th Field which served with the 34th Division. The 188th though organized only in 1940, wrote a lot of history across France, Belgium, and Germany, serving with the 101st and the 82nd Airborne Divisions, the Ninth and the 104th and the Eighth and the First Infantry Divisions, and the Third Armored Division.

There are myriad details which could be fitted into a full-fledged historical record of the 47th Division and its ancestors in arms. The redesignation of units through the years, such as the conversion to anti-aircraft of the old 205th and 206th Infantry Regiments, could be tabulated.

But of more lively interest, perhaps, are the men and their actions, the campaigns and their locale, the problems of logistics and their solution—all the related movements of history which have created the tradition upon which the 47th was built.

If in the process of telling the story that way, some important items of military genealogy are slighted, the reader may yet gain in inspiration and a feeling for the overall subject what is lost in minutiae.

It would vastly broaden the scope of this account if some history could be included on every unit from states and territories in which current wearers of the Viking patch make their homes. But that would expand this review beyond all bounds of formal military history.

So for purposes of this book, the exploits of outfits more or less directly traceable to the 47th Infantry Division up to the time of its tremendous expansion in 1951 into an "All-American" Division, will be recounted as "our" history until we have written some more in action or in the ever-alert pursuits of peace.

The full richness and impact of our history may best be felt and appreciated by picking episodes one at a time, from the unit histories—slogging along with the doughboys and artillerymen through deserts and mountains and jungles.

135th INFANTRY

Take the 135th Infantry Regiment for a starter.

The history of the 34th "Red Bull" Infantry Division, the original Minnesota-Iowa outfit which saw more service in Africa and Italy than any American division, crackles with action by the 135th Infantry, and the supporting fires of the 125th, 151st, and 175th FA Battalions.

Soldiers of this eager outfit were the first American troops in Europe in World War II—a fact acknowledged with thanks by Winston Churchill when that British Prime Minister inspected installations in Italy.

The regiment's government-conducted tour of the Mediterranean and European theaters began in the Spring of 1942, in Northern Ireland, where 1st and 3rd Battalions were ensconced on the estate of Sir Basil Brooke, and Regimental headquarters, though its troops lived in Nissen huts, did business out of a castle in County Tyrone.

The Irish Home Guard played the role of "enemy" to add realism to some of the rugged training over the fog-shrouded moors and bogs. "There was no such thing as a rainy-day schedule," the regimental historian relates.

The North African action started with a "surrender" of some of our troops at Algiers—to the French, who were to be our allies anyway but who had felt obliged to "defend" their city. The French treated the Americans with true Gallic gallantry, and released them several days later to go fight Germans.

The men of the 135th had a chance to see how chivalrously the Nazis fought when PFC Melvin A. Lein, a Medic, was shot and killed while on a mission to aid a wounded officer. Lein was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross posthumously. His buddies were alerted to the wiles of the foe. Some of Field Marshal Rommel's men were even discovered wearing U. S. clothing.

One of the early and most famous actions of 135th troops was the capture, in cooperation with the 133rd and the 168th Infantry Regiments, of Hill 609—an ominous promontory dominating the North African scene like a huge fortified castle. The German defense of this natural fortress was so formidable, that a couple of days and nights were consumed reducing other hills protecting the mighty 609.

Finally, on the morning of April 29, 1943, the 3rd Battalion was in position for the direct attack up the rocky slopes. The men moved in close under a rolling artillery barrage, gaining the escarpment part way to the summit. When the supporting barrage lifted, however, the doughboys were heavily counter-attacked and were driven back 400 yards. It took the rest of that day—till 1600 that afternoon—to regain the lost ground.

Colonel Robert P. Miller, present commander of the 136th Regiment, distinguished himself in the Hill 609 action. A Lieutenant Colonel and Battalion Commander in the 135th at the time, he rallied his men and personally led attacks which outwitted and outfought the Germans.

The many months of action in Africa, during which the Americans, the British, and the French destroyed or captured Rommel's Afrika Korps, were followed by the inevitable "rest and training" period. Training schedules traditionally caught up with troops within days of coming out of the line. This was one way of capitalizing on battle experience while the action was still fresh in the participants' minds. It also kept anybody from getting too fat in rest camp to get back into battle harness.

After a summer of battlefield salvage, troop schools, and stevedore work in Bizerte, the entire regiment got invasion, leadership, and battle training in North Africa, before sailing across the Mediterranean for the landing September 21, 1943, at Salerno, Italy.

Italy—the campaign known as "Mud, Mules, and Mountains"—took a year to conquer. Even after the Fascist leader, Premier Benito Mussolini, was shot and hanged by the heels, and the Italian army shifted from its Nazi alliance to "co-belligerency" with the Allies, the slugging up the mountain peninsula was slow. The 800 miles of grinding, exasperating warfare from Salerno and Anzio up Italy's Apennine spine to the industrial valley of the Po, tell the story of war's misery and monotony with all the eloquence of a bulldozer.

There were the German Winter Line, the Hitler Line, the Gustav Line, the Gothic Line, the Genghis Khan Line to be broken. The 135th broke through them all, in gruelling succession, to finally flood out over the fertile Po valley where the surviving Germans surrendered in regimental and Division strengths.

The 34th Division's story of the Italian campaign is filled with praise of other units in the fight—the "Red Raiders" of Iowa's famous 133rd Hawkeye Regiment; the "Rattle Snake Commandos" of the 168th, "a devil-may-care outfit which developed a technique of riding tanks bare-back"; the 45th "Thunderbird" Division from Oklahoma; the 36th "Arrowhead" Division from Texas; the Nisei Battalions of Japanese-Americans; the 109th Engineers who "when the shooting got hot put aside their tools and joined the riflemen."

There is unending praise for the artillery support, for the newly added Cannon Company, for the Medics and supply trains, for the cooks and clerks who in the pinches were thrown into the firing line, for the MPs who kept traffic moving, and the Signal Company which in the pursuit phase at the close of the Italian campaign "maintained a daily message run of over one thousand miles."

Of the accuracy of supporting artillery fires of the 125th, 175th, and 151st FA, there is this dry and appreciative comment: "Enemy tanks got within 100 yards of the leading elements of the 1st Battalion which made very close shooting for the artillery. However, the troops were able to withstand the shelling and at nightfall reorganized."

German P. W. Camp, N. Africa: 9,000 prisoners in one day

Italy—"Mud, Mules, and Mountains"

In the bitterly difficult process of crossing defended rivers between mountains, "most of the supply was carried by hand at night, varying from 1,000 yards to four miles . . . Many times it was possible to feed only one meal in 24 hours and that at night. Round trips for food and water took as long as 11 hours."

Mule trains' sharp hooves often cut communication lines. The mules often lacked for shoes because of the shortage of mule-shoe nails. The men lacked resupply of socks for a time. There were many cases of malaria and jaundice. And German patrols were encountered challenging in excellent English.

Rotation of troops. One-half of 1 percent per month, some 18 months after arrival in Europe.

Our own patrols, "out day and night, engaged in many fire fights," the 135th historian reports.

Monte Cassino, guarding the main road to Rome, was one of the toughest positions of the war to crack. The Germans used the monastery on this mountain as an observation post, even though the Allies at first refused to attack the religious shrine.

The regiment's historian sighs heavily at one spot: "The fighting strength of the regiment was sapped by constant hard fighting over 48 days. Some of the rifle companies were as low as 30 men present for duty and the average strength was 50 men."

The men of the 135th were battle-wise as well as valiant. At one point in the Italian fighting, 2nd Battalion, ready to attack, received a note from the enemy, asking for a truce to remove the dead. "It was ignored and the attack was launched," the official account recalls.

Rome—the Eternal City, spiritual and physical goal of the Northward-toiling troops—was the first Axis capital entered by Allied forces, and the 135th put the first infantrymen into the city limits.

The fatigued and strictly factual historian of that epic day—June 5, 1944—allows portions of one paragraph to record the feeling of the Italian populace at their liberation:

"The civilian population of the 'Eternal City' lined the streets, throwing flowers and fruit to the troops and embracing and kissing the men. Because of this emotional welcome, the movement of vehicles and foot soldiers was slow. Our infantrymen were footsore, dusty and weary, but the greeting of a liberated people aided greatly in reviving their spirits. The regimental command post was established in the Majestic Hotel on 5 June."

Partisans and local Italian guides and informers became more and more useful as the Americans pushed on north toward the complete conquest of the Germans in Italy. The Germans, their transport near ruin, "stole food from the civilians."

Yet the Gothic Line, which PWs reported Hitler had given direct orders must hold, was defended with all the stubbornness and diabolic war-skill for which the Germans were renowned. One more great range of mountains—this time in heavy snow—the Allies had to push through.

But when the hordes of freedom finally burst through these mountains and into the fertile valley of the Po, the men of the 135th had the satisfaction of knowing that they had made possible the fantastic high-speed forays in which whole German divisions surrendered.

The German army was licked, south of the Alps, and the process of pounding Hitler's Reich to impotence could be relentlessly carried through by other outfits striking from the west.

While the 135th was churning through all this world history in Africa and Italy, two major components of today's 47th Division were punching the minions of the Japanese warlords northward from island to island in the vast archipelagoes of the South Pacific.

164th INFANTRY REGIMENT

The 164th—including sons of the same North Dakota outfit which saw so much bitter, malarial service in that same part of the world to gain the Philippines their original independence from Spain—was back in the South Pacific in World War II, assigned to the Americal Division in New Caledonia months before the North African invasion on the other side of the world.

Look at the comparative battle honors:

Spanish-American War: Manila.

Philippine Insurrection: Manila, Laguna De Bay, San Isidro.

World War II: Northern Solomons, Southern Philippines, Leyte, Guadalcanal.

The 164th was, in fact, the first United States ground outfit to take the offensive in World War II, another in the long line of "firsts" by the men who have laid the foundations of the 47th. The ancestors of the 135th Infantry Regiment, be it remembered, were the first to answer the federal call for volunteers back in 1861; they were the first in the European theater in World War II; the 175th Field Artillery Battalion fired the first shells at the Nazis, to open the Tunisian campaign in 1942; the 1st Rangers were formed 80 percent from men of the 34th "Red Bull" Division in which the 135th and 175th plus other future Viking outfits were mainstays. So goes the list of "firsts" by the 47th forebears.

Guadalcanal!

The very name of that sweltering island epitomizes the jungle fighting in which Americans made themselves the masters. There are other famous South Pacific island names—sticky with blood, muck, and sweat—on the 164th's rollcall of stations called at and conquered. Names such as Bougainville, Leyte, Cebu, and Negros.

Guadalcanal. Lessons learned in the fighting there aided American soldiers all over the world. Colonel Frank Richards, current regimental commander of the 164th who in the South Pacific campaign, as a Lieutenant Colonel, commanded 1st Battalion of that same regiment, stressed the need for training patrols in the art of "patience".

It was the 164th, attached to the Marines on Guadalcanal, which marched and fought and chopped its way through jungles back and forth the length and breadth of that slimy isle, to reverse the Japanese tide of Pacific victories.

In a Nip-and-tuck battle raging through rainy days and nights, these men saved Henderson Airfield, loss of which might have slowed the Pacific campaign by many months.

General Vandegrift of the Marines is reported to have jubilantly offered to "take the 164th, lock, stock, and barrel, into the Marines."

Malaria hit an estimated 90 per cent of the men in more or less virulent form. Still, they fought on, and Guadal was declared "secure" February 9, 1943—four months and a day after the Norh Dakotans had embarked from their New Caledonia base for their island-hopping campaign.

From Guadalcanal, the storied outfit went to the Fiji Islands "for rest, recuperation, retraining, and replacements."

Major General John R. Hodge took command of the Americal Division in May, 1943. The 164th was to serve under him again, during its present 1951 tour of active duty, Lieutenant General Hodge being Third Army commander. Colonel Crump Garvin, now Major General Garvin, commanding Camp Rucker where the postwar 164th went with the 47th for training, was regimental commander of the famous regiment on Fiji and Bougainville islands, from June, 1943, to April, 1944.

Patrolling during the island-hopping campaign was definitely in the "long-range" class. Patrols would sometimes be out a week at a time. Outposts would be as far as 15 miles outside the perimeter defense. Everything was "hand-carry," yet troops of the 164th were in contact with the enemy continually for more than a year in this phase.

Victory on the island of Cebu gave the 164th the right to form part of the guard on the first large group of Japanese to surrender since the day of infamy, Dec. 7, 1941. On Cebu, the Nips were dug into caves, provisioned for a year's stay.

The Southern Cross shoulder-patch moved on up the archipelago, right into the Japanese home islands. The 164th assumed control of various Japanese installations in Yokohama and Tokyo, not returning to the States until November, 1945—two full months after the official setting of the Rising Sun military empire.

Individual initiative—that ingredient of victory which Americans have always possessed in abundance—was also stressed in the 164th lessons on jungle fighting. Difficulty of communication in the thick jungle put a premium on the ability to come to quick and practical decisions, and act on them.

This initiative and ability to improvise was a strong point with the 164th even during its earlier tussle in the Philippines in 1898-1899.

A sort of intelligence and reconnaissance platoon, known then as "Young's Scouts" because a man named Young organized it, was set up. The American command wanted some scouts it "could send out through the country without support, without provisions, except a little coffee and salt, to obtain news of the enemy, find them and clear the way for the column."

Reported General Lawton of the San Isidro or Northern Expedition of the Spring of 1899: "... Every service—even to the use of pick and shovel—was performed by each, from the colonel down to the private, with the same commendable earnestness that has given this regiment its reputation for cheerful and effective accomplishment of any task set it."

The health of the 164th was the best of any outfit in the expedition, Major Cardwell, the surgeon, reported. He attributed this health record "to the fact that during the entire trip the regiments never missed a meal, and never more than an hour late." And then he told how this remarkable record was set under such disadvantageous conditions:

"Every company carried coffee boilers and other cooking utensils, and two days' rations on small pony carts which were kept closed up with their column, no matter what the state of the roads or what the opposition of the enemy or from commanding officers of other organizations. The fact that none of the carts belonged to or had ever been issued by the Quartermaster's Department did not prevent their increasing to a greater degree than any other one factor the efficiency of this regiment."

Such was the fighting morale of the 164th, even in those early days of American participation in world affairs, that they volunteered, 95 percent of them, to stay on and pacify the Philippine Insurrection, after the campaign with Spain was won. Thus they were a true part of the ancient Viking tradition which links the profession of arms with the abiding pursuits of peace, the tradition which makes fighting men refuse to give up the battle until they have won it and secured its gains and reorganized the position, as it were, against counterattack from future disruptive forces. The Vikings of that early day saw clearly that after they had liberated a country, their duty continued until they had helped the native government establish itself firmly enough to guarantee the inhabitants the freedom and democracy for which they had mutually fought.

America's wisdom in the administration of the liberated Philippines, setting that young nation's steps firmly in the path of independence and strength, came to be admired throughout the civilized world as a new and enlightened alternative to imperialism. The men of the 164th stuck by through the Insurrection, to help clinch their victory in constructive good government.

The 164th in World War I supplied many replacements for the 1st Division and other outfits, and trained 55,000. The 1st North Dakota Infantry, which became the 164th, supplied most of the officers to help organize the 2nd North Dakota Infantry, authorized by the War Department in 1917.

A long way from home

136th INFANTRY REGIMENT

The 136th "Bearcat" Regiment was also in the Pacific, though in another Division (the 33rd Infantry) while the 164th was hacking through the jungles with the Americal.

With a history just about as old as the 135th, the Bearcats were hailed at one time as the "Saviors of Kentucky," later went to the Mexican Border to help head off the bandit Pancho Villa. In World War I, the 136th trained with the 34th "Red Bull" Division, then known as the "Sandstorm Division." These tough, sun-bronzed men were sent into various outfits in France to give strength where most needed; thus their World War I history, though up to the glorious standard set in the Indian wars and maintained throughout, is intertwined with the military annals of numerous proud outfits.

The 136th story is picked up again, in its own name, when the famous old regiment became a part of the 33rd Illinois National Guard Division in March, 1942.

Jungle training began midway out in the Pacific, in Hawaii. This, added to earlier Mojave Desert training in the States, made the Bearcats invincible when they got to the Japanese-held islands.

New Guinea came first—that torrid mass of mountains and jungle. For the first three months, the Bearcats toughened their backs as emergency stevedores unloading supply ships which had accumulated in the harbor. Then came a combat assignment for the 33rd Division—and the 136th Regiment was selected to do the job, another "first".

The assignment was "to seek out and destroy the Japanese 211th Infantry." A complicated, sweaty, bloody job. Just an example of how nasty it got: Some Nips "withheld fire from their camouflaged roots until our troops were nearly under them," the 33rd Division relates. "Then they would drop short-fused demolition charges (TNT)."

Overland supply had to be supplemented by airdrop. Ammunition alone was being expended beyond the capacity of resupply by hand-carry. Evacuation of each casualty to the coast was a four-day round trip for eight men. Evacuation of the dead had to be abandoned until after the campaign. Bamboo rafts floated some of the casualties downstream.

"The fight quickly broke to squad level. The infighting precluded use of artillery," the account continues. "The dough-boy's personal weapons had to decide the issue. Tree snipers were searched out and shot. The ground ahead was raked with fire. Individual Japs in hasty outpost entrenchments were flanked and then destroyed by hand grenade."

136th and Luzon

Philippine Jeep

So went the fighting on Morotai and later Luzon and other islands. Here is a descriptive passage of how it was:

"For three days the rifle companies did nothing but tramp hills and root out die-hard Jap groups. The sun was hot, water was forever scarce, and the enemy, usually numbering 15 or 20 to a band, bitterly contested every yard of advance. Gradually, however, the Japanese holdouts were either annihilated or scattered. . . ."

In the Skyline Ridge action, Fox Company fought a lurid night battle, beating back Banzai charges in hand-to-hand fighting—only to discover at daylight that "for every lifeless Nip around the perimeter, three live and healthy ones had assumed positions of siege . . . Company F was surrounded."

Airdrop again was used for the beleaguered Foxes. But of the supplies kicked out of the door of the C-47, only water, and some ammo, fell within the Fox position; the enemy got the food, radio batteries, and hand grenades intended for the Americans.

A liaison plane was then called into the fight. The pilot would skim over the Japanese positions, then radio what he saw to Fox. A concentration of about 40 enemy up a reverse slope only 60 yards from Fox Company was discovered thus. Fox's captain decided the desperateness of the situation called for desperate measures. A six-man volunteer combat patrol pushed in under a friendly artillery barrage, funneled M-1 and BAR fire into the sneaking enemy. The liaison plane took another look, radioed, "You got about 30 of them. The rest took off."

Companies E and G tried breakthrough marches to relieve surrounded Fox, after Captain Suess, Fox CO, was killed by a sniper. But both relief companies were driven back, with heavy casualties.

With a third straight night of Banzai attacks threatening battered Fox Company, the battalion commander ordered the gallant survivors to escape under cover of darkness and a barrage of supporting fires was laid down to keep the Japanese in their foxholes and disguise the impending move.

The Nips attacked again that night, as expected. But they were 15 minutes too late to catch the Americans. And they were apparently too baffled, on finding only eight American dead at the position, to give chase to the nearly exhausted Fox column dragging itself over the ridges and valleys to safety. The Nips had suffered as many as 150 killed in a single attack on the dug-in Fox position, yet such was the skill and ferocity of the defense, that American casualties were only a fraction those of the enemy.

Canny use of flanking maneuvers, of cover, fire and movement, kept the relative cost low in ensuing attack actions, too.

Here's how Able Company, for example, converted a stalled attack into a smashing victory:

While friendly artillery and mortars peppered the Nip positions, the company commander spotted a small rocky pinnacle about 10 feet high, some 300 yards behind the enemy and slightly above them.

A squad from 2nd Platoon slipped out of the line, while the company maintained frontal fire, "and took advantage of the melee to branch off to the left flank."

Detection might well have meant annihilation for the daring squad. But such was the furore of the company's main frontal effort that the Nips ignored this threat to their rear. The squad reached the base of the pinnacle and scooted to covered positions among the crags. Its two BARs, two submachine guns, and individual M-1s opened up.

Shocked, the Nips wheeled, but too late. The squad on the pinnacle was firing right down their throats. The main Able force then pressed its direct attack in earnest, mopping up the stupefied Nip survivors. The squad on the pinnacle accounted for most of 87 enemy slain in this perfectly-timed action.

Companies A, F, G, and I, received the Distinguished Unit Citation for their Philippine action.

ARTILLERY

The history of three of the Artillery battalions in so far as World War II is concerned is generally the same. The three battalions, the 125th, 151st, and 175th, were all a part of the 34th Division and all of them, for the most part, took part in almost all battles of that war. It began with the 175th making the assault landing at Algiers—and that same battalion firing the first round of any U. S. land forces against the Nazi land forces at Medjez El Bab, North Africa, on 19 November 1942. At that time, the 175th FA Battalion was a part of the British First Army.

Soon after that, the balance of the Division joined them. From then on, these three Artillery battalions served together—through the campaigns in North Africa terminating with the surrender on 15 May 1943. Again in Italy they held forth with the employment of one battalion to support the 36th Division at Salerno. Then on north—with three crossings of the Volturno River, the assault of the German Winter Line, the Drive to the Rapido River, the crossing of the Rapido, Cassino, the Anzio Beachhead, the Drive to Rome, the fall of Rome, the race to Leghorn, Pisa, the Gothic Line, the Apennine Line, the Valley of the Po, the Genghis Khan Line, and finally, Bologna.

151st FIELD ARTILLERY BATTALION

The longest lanyard, historically speaking, is that of the 151st Field leading back all the way to 1864, when the 1st Regiment, Minnesota Heavy Artillery was organized.

Artillery and cavalry outfits, particularly, were often known by the names of their commanders in those days. Among the grand daddies of the 151st was the "Emmet Light Artillery Battery," organized in St. Paul in 1881 and combined in 1887 with the 1st Troop of Cavalry to form the Squadron of Mounted Troops. Across the Mississippi River in Minneapolis,

Artillery-Fire Direction Center

there was Bennet's Battery of Light Artillery. The designation as "151st" came in 1917, following Mexican Border service, when the outfit was assigned to the 42nd Division.

The list of World War I battle streamers, earned by this renowned battalion, reads like a roster of many of France's bloodiest battlegrounds: Lorraine, Champagne, Champagne-Marne, Aisne-Marne, St. Mihiel, Meuse-Argonne. The 151st was with the 42nd Rainbow Division in France.

In World War II, the battle-smartened way the 151st performed shows up even in the accounts of housekeeping details. The battalion's landing at Oran, North Africa, was marred by the stoving in of its troop transport just outside the port. But the vessel limped in, and the men disembarked at Mers-el-Kebir.

The British 25-pounders which the 151st had been proudly firing were finally replaced by 105 howitzers in the closing days of the struggle for Hill 609. The crews leaped to their new guns like the cannoneers they were, learning the new weapons in a single day of concentrated study and orientation service practice.

Of a move out of the battle area, back to Bizerte, the battalion's Boswell grouses, "As we anticipated and feared, the guns had hardly cooled from combat, when training schedules made their appearance and the battalion was busily engaged in a training program complete with service practice." There was a period of PW camp work, MP duty, and general "policing up." Then back to combat team training—and that meant Italy.

Salerno. The wild night of the landing and the fantastic and courageous improvisations from gun position to sand dune to anti-tank position the next day tell a dramatic story of daring and initiative fending off catastrophe.

Only the distant glow from Mount Vesuvius softened the inky blackness of the night (Sept. 8-9, 1943). In the pitch, Batteries B and C were cut off at sea by other craft carrying infantry personnel to the beach.

At 0630, Green Beach was still not secured, and enemy machine gun, mortar and artillery fire ranged 1,000 yards out to sea. The column of ships with the artillery aboard (all but one which had sunk in a ramming) turned back to sea, where plans were shifted to put in at Red Beach. Naval patrol boats helped out on communications to authorize this move.

Demand for supporting fires was so pressing, that guns were wheeled into battery positions straight from the landing Dukws without any attempt at reorganization by regular battery designation.

Between 1030 and 1330, a total of 14 German Mark IV tanks attacked in one battery sector. "The battery burned up or completely destroyed five of these at ranges varying from 200 to 1,000 yards and dispersed the others." Even a gun which had to be manhandled back into firing position after each round because the hard surfaced road under the trail spades gave no purchase—even this gun destroyed three tanks.

At one point, the 36th Divarty commander, Brigadier General Myles Cowles, jumped into the Number Five spot and helped shift trails.

To fire the 3-round "New Year's" greeting from windy Mount Sammucro, the guns had to be winched into position. So rough was the living under combat conditions in Italy that a rest period in pyramidal tents was described with the word "luxury."

Heaviest day's expenditure of artillery ammunition by the battalion: 4,568 rounds.

The 151st caught assignments to such famous hot spots as Cassino and Anzio—the latter a 14-by-8-mile beachhead so shallow that every inch of it was accessible to enemy artillery.

175th FIELD ARTILLERY BATTALION

The 175th Field Artillery can trace its ancestry to the 151st Field Artillery Regiment. In December 1941, during the American Defense period, the 34th Infantry Division was reorganized from a square type division to a triangular type division. This necessitated the deactivation of field artillery regiments since the largest organization of field artillery in an infantry division became a battalion. Under this reorganization, the 2nd Battalion of the 151st Field Artillery Regiment was redesignated as the 175th Field Artillery Battalion. Therefore, the history and heraldry of the 151st Field Artillery Regiment, from its participation on the Mexican Border through its long days and hours of arduous campaign in World War I and the peacetime training in the National Guard between World War I and the induction into Federal Service in February 1941, are as rightly a part of the 175th Field Artillery Battalion as they are of the 151st Field Artillery Battalion.

The 175th Field Artillery Battalion began acquiring history under its new designation early in 1942 soon after arriving with the 34th Division in North Ireland when it was selected to put on a demonstration for the King and Queen of England.

It was the 175th Field Artillery Battalion, as a part of the Eastern Assault Forces, that was part of the first American troops to make the assault upon Hitler's dynasty when they landed on Beer Beach, west of Algeria, North Africa, on that fateful morning on 8 November 1942. Even as they were loading the assault boats for their trip to the beach, they heard the President of the United States speaking in French, over British "wireless," telling the people of North Africa of our landing.

Within a few days, the British First Army, of which the Eastern Assault Forces (American troops) were a part, was ordered east to repel Field Marshal Rommel's troops that were approaching from the southeast. There near Medjez-el-Bab, the 175th Field Artillery Battalion fired the first shell that was fired by American ground troops against German ground troops in World War II.

Later, grouped with artillery of the 1st and 9th Divisions, they played an important part in repelling the final German thrusts at Kasserine Pass.

Not long after that the balance of the 34th Division arrived and the 175th FA was again back with its parent organization.

125th FIELD ARTILLERY BATTALION

The 125th FA Battalion can trace its lineage back to 15 April 1887 when it was first organized as the Third Infantry Regiment, Minnesota Reserve National Guard. It consisted of ten companies scattered from the Crookston Rifles in Crookston, Minnesota, to a company in Owatonna, in the South.

It received its Federal recognition as a part of the Minnesota National Guard in 1889. Nine years later in 1898, it was redesignated as the 14th Minnesota Volunteer Infantry Regiment and mustered into Federal Service on the 8th of May, 1898 for service in the Spanish-American War and the Philippine insurrection. This service was of short duration and it was mustered out on the 18th of November 1898 to return to Minnesota and re-organize.

This regiment was to see the second tour of Federal Service when it was mustered on the 30th of June 1916 at Fort Snelling for service on the Mexican Border. Returning from this service in December, it was again called to active duty in July, 1917, for service in World War I. Soon after mustering, it was redesignated the 125th FA Regiment and assigned to the 34th Infantry Division.

Returning from World War I, this regiment reorganized on the 14th of January 1921 as the 125th FA Regiment of the Minnesota National Guard. During the long years from 1921 to 10 February 1941, it participated in numerous civil disasters and catastrophes in the state until it was called to service for the Federal Government for the fourth time on the 10th of February 1941.

After completing its training at Camp Claiborne, Louisiana, with the 34th Division, it was reorganized in January 1942 and its first battalion was redesignated the 125th FA Battalion while the second battalion became the 194th FA Battalion.

As mentioned heretofore, this battalion participated with the other FA Battalions of the 34th Division in all of the major campaigns in North Africa and Italy until after V-J Day and its final deactivation in November 1945.

188th FIELD ARTILLERY BATTALION

The 188th FA Battalion of the North Dakota wing of the Vikings stemmed from the 3rd Battalion, 185th FA Regiment in the 34th Division as the initial North Dakota units were activated in the fall of 1936.

Just prior to the call of the North Dakota units into Federal Service in World War II, the state was given permission to organize a regiment of field artillery and the battalion was redesignated as the 1st Battalion, 188th Field Artillery Regiment.

The organization was inducted into Federal Service on April 1, 1941 and was ordered to Fort Francis E. Warren, Wyoming. The battalion remained in training at that post until the attack at Pearl Harbor when the 188th was ordered to Fort Lewis, Washington. In 1943, the battalion participated in Desert Maneuvers at Indio, California and in the fall of that year, went into training at Camp Gruber, Oklahoma until it was shipped overseas in November of 1943.

In England, the 188th FA Battalion was assigned to VII Corps and as such was selected to participate in the assault against the coast of France. In fact, the organization became the first battalion of Corps Artillery to land in Europe, landing on D plus 5.

It received its initial battle mission under its own name on the Utah Beachhead in Normandy, supporting the 101st Airborne Division. The next day, in this fast moving situation, the 188th switched its fires to support those of the 82nd Airborne and later into St. Lo and was attached to the 1st "Red One" Division.

After the St. Lo breakthrough, the battalion marched with the Red One all the way across France, around Paris and up to the Belgian city of Mons, thence eastward past Liege to aid in the reduction of the important Siegfried line anchor at Aachen, Germany.

In its march eastward in the autumn of 1944, the 188th fired supporting missions for several divisions, including the 9th and 104th. After von Rundstedt's smash into the Ardennes, the battalion was moved back into Belgium and supported the 3rd Armored Division during the Battle of the Bulge.

Following the defeat of the German forces in the Bulge, the battalion moved back into Germany in the vicinity of Duren to support the 8th Infantry Division in the Roer Crossings. Racing across the plains following the Roer operation, the 188th drove to the banks of the Rhine at Cologne, Germany.

When the news of the capture of the Remagen bridgehead was received, the VII Corps ordered the 188th Battalion to sideslip from Cologne to the south, cross the Rhine and support the 3rd Armored Division again as it slashed southeast along the east bank of the Rhine. The battalion supported the fires of the 3rd Armored "Spearhead" Division in its famed dash and flanking movement to Paderborn, Germany.

After the collapse of the Ruhr pocket, the 188th was again attached to the 1st Division for its final drive against the crumbling German resistance in the Harz mountains, and VE Day found the battalion in the vicinity of Leipzig, which was later evacuated to be turned over to Russia as part of their occupation zone. The organization then resumed occupation duties in the vicinity of Kolleda, Germany, at which point many old veterans of the battalion were transferred to the 7th Armored Division for redeployment to the United States.

In September of 1945, the battalion crossed the German border headed for redeployment camps near Rheims, France, after having established a creditable record for itself as a combat unit throughout the fighting in Europe. To attribute to the operations in World War II, the 188th Battalion flies five battle streamers from its colors signifying active participation in the campaign in Normandy, Northern France, Rhineland, Ardennes, and Central Europe.

256th AAA BATTALION

One other Battalion of Artillery, the 256th AAA Battalion, although new to the 47th Division is not new insofar as its history and heraldry is concerned. It began its life in 1864 as a part of the Heavy Artillery of the Minnesota Volunteers. It included a battery of Emmet Light Artillery.

This group of Artillery Batteries expanded until in 1913, it was redesignated as the 1st Field Artillery Regiment and stationed in St. Paul. It was mustered into Federal Service for the Mexican Border in 1916 as the 1st Minnesota Field Artillery Regiment with Regimental Headquarters and the 1st Battalion stationed in St. Paul and the 2nd Battalion in Minneapolis.

On the 23rd of June 1917, the 1st Minnesota FA Regiment was called into Federal Service again and redesignated the 151st FA.

After two years of participation in World War I, it was demobilized and returned to the State of Minnesota.

In the reorganization of the Minnesota National Guard subsequent to World War I, the 1st battalion was reorganized and redesignated as the 206th Infantry and as such participated in many state missions of civil disaster.

AAA quadmount ready for action

When Hitler was conducting his Blitz Krieg across France in 1940, the War Department revalued its program and as a result, determined that more anti-aircraft artillery was required to defend the country. As a result, the 205th and 206th Infantry were converted into anti-aircraft artillery and became the 215th, 216th, and 217th Coast Artillery Regiments.

The 216th Regiment was inducted into Federal Service on 6 January 1941. After a short period of shake-down at their home station, they departed for their training center at Camp Haan, California, near Los Angeles. Soon after arriving there, they reorganized into anti-aircraft battalions of which the 256th Battalion was one. The outfit, on maneuvers in the San Francisco Oakland Bay area just prior to December 7, 1941, was destined to serve its entire World War II service in this vicinity until deactivated in February 1944.

The 217th CA (AAA) Regiment, formed of the 3rd Battalions of the old 205th-206th Infantry Regiments of the 92nd Infantry Brigade, Minnesota National Guard, was called to active federal duty 10 February 1941. On 20 February, the Regiment went to Camp Haan.

The 92nd Infantry Brigade was converted to the 101st CA Brigade, and the Regiment stayed at Haan for training until 2 December 1941, then joined in defense of the San Francisco Bay area.

In July, 1944, the 217th went to Camp Hood, Texas, for reorganization, furnishing a number of cadres for new outfits.

The 215th CA (AAA) Regiment trained along with the 216th and 217th at Camp Haan, including firing practice in the Mojave desert near Barstow, California.

In midsummer, 1941, the 215th, composed of Southern Minnesota Guardsmen and their selective service buddies, left for Kodiak island, Alaska, convoying by motor to Camp Murray, Washington, and sailing from Seattle.

The 215th was therefore all dug in at its rocky new island home when the news, "Pearl attacked" came crackling over the airwaves Sunday, 7 December 1941.

Moving up

Well into 1944, the 215th or elements thereof manned Kodiak. Some units and individuals went on "out the chain" to numerous garrisons of the Aleutian islands west of Kodiak. The headquarters at Attu, western most of the Aleutians, was drawn to a great extent from officers and men of the 215th.

The bulk of the remaining 215th troops on Kodiak eventually went to Texas for reorganization, and many of the Alaskan veterans subsequently saw service in Europe.

194th TANK BATTALION

Original components of the 194th Tank Battalion were the following National Guard units: 34th Tank Company, Brainerd, Minnesota; 35th Tank Company, St. Joseph, Missouri, and 40th Tank Company, Salinas, California. These units were inducted into Federal Service for World War II on 10 February 1941, 23 December 1940, and 3 March 1941, respectively.

On 12 March 1941, at Fort Lewis, Washington, these units were brought together to constitute the 194th Tank Battalion.

The first armored unit sent overseas in World War II, it was caught in the fall of Bataan. The death march and Japanese prison camps caused a heavy toll. About 75% did not survive.

The battalion was deactivated in the Philippine Department on 2 April 1946.

In recognition of service in the Philippines, the battalion colors carry the following Distinguished Unit Streamers: (1) "Defense of the Philippines," (2) "Luzon, 1941-42," and (3) "Bataan Peninsula."

In Brainerd, Minnesota, on 9 April 1947, the battalion was reorganized as a separate tank battalion in the Minnesota National Guard. Communities furnishing units then were Brainerd, Crosby, Long Prairie, Aitkin, Milaca, and Princeton. Subsequent reorganization left Brainerd with H & S Co., Long Prairie with "A" Co., Aitkin with "B" Co., and Milaca with "C" Co.

So constituted the battalion again entered upon Federal Service on 16 January 1951 as the organic tank battalion of the 47th Infantry Division stationed at Camp Rucker, Alabama.

April 9th is a hallowed day in the battalion as it was on that date that Bataan fell. Each year the day is observed not only to revere the memory of the valiant dead, but also to renew faith in the citizen soldier in whom lies the real strength of America.

747th ORDNANCE COMPANY

One additional organization with the Division can check its history and heraldry to experience in World War II, and that is the 747th Ordnance Company. This organization was originally activated as the 118th Motor Repair Section at Camp Ripley, Minnesota. Later, it was redesignated as the 109th Ordnance Company. As such, it was inducted into Federal Service with the 34th Division on 10 February 1941.

This company's history emblazoned in steel and brass, vehicles and guns, is entitled to its share of glory which the 34th Division enjoys. Were it not for the able mechanics and grease monkeys who kept the motor vehicles in a good state of maintenance and kept the weapons in excellent shape, certainly this Division could not have established the fine record in North Africa plus the march from Salerno in Italy to the top of the Italian boot.

This, then, winds up the heraldry of the units in the present 47th Infantry Division whose history and heraldry goes back beyond the date of the activation of the "Viking" Division.

The following additional units of the Division have been activated since the 15th of September 1946 and therefore, have no previous history or heraldry. These units include the 47th Military Police Company, the 47th Band, 47th Signal Company, 47th Recon Company, 47th Headquarters Company and the 47th Quartermaster Company, together with the 682nd Engineer (Combat) Battalion and the 204th Medical Battalion. They are all proud to support the other combat elements of the "Viking" team and they are doing a fine job of it.

AFTER WORLD WAR II

And now for the post World War II era.

In April, 1946, the Department of the Army notified the Governor of Minnesota, the Honorable Edward J. Thye, and the Governor of North Dakota, the Honorable Fred G. Aandahl, that the troop basis for the States of Minnesota and North Dakota, in addition to the other troops, would be the 47th Infantry Division with one combat team of the Division in North Dakota and the balance of the Division in Minnesota.

Prior to this time, the Adjutant General of Minnesota had appointed a committee to study the reorganization of the Minnesota National Guard. The committee had as its vice-chairman and acting chairman, Colonel Philip C. Bettenburg, since General Hendrickson, the chairman, was still serving overseas in the capacity as the Chief of Staff of the 9th Corps.

The Adjutant General placed on this committee the responsibility of developing a plan for the reorganization of the National Guard to include the disposition of the units throughout the state and the designation of the various regiments and battalions. The committee was faced with a great task since the War Department's assumption for the new National Guard included the possibility of acquiring manpower through the use of Universal Military Training.

The committee then prepared the plan in three parts. Part A: If Universal Military Training were in effect, each unit to be organized at full strength. Part B: Without Universal Military Training reducing the number of units and planning for such units to attain full strength. Part C: Organize all of the units and expect to attain only approximately one-half strength. Plan C was approved by the War Department in September 1946. The organization formally got under way with the commissioning of Major General Norman E. Hendrickson as Commanding General of the 47th Infantry Division.

He immediately made the announcement of the appointment of the following officers to the positions named: Assistant Commanding General, Brigadier General Philip C. Bettenburg; Chief of Staff, Colonel Harlan D. Bynell; G1, Lt. Col. Reuben N. Hanson; G2, Lt. Col. Donald A. McGregor; G3, Lt. Col. Leon H. Hagen; G4, Lt. Col. Clark G. Johnson; Commanding General Division Artillery, Brigadier General Fritz Peterson; Commanding Officer 135th, Colonel Richard Cook; Commanding Officer 136th, Colonel Lester A. Hancock. The State of North Dakota selected Colonel Frank Richards to head the 164th Infantry Regiment and Lt. Col. Robert W. Carlson to command the 188th Field Artillery Battalion.

The first organization actually inducted into active service was the Division Headquarters and Headquarters Company of Minnesota on the 15th day of September 1946. From then on, almost every day the companies and units were being activated and inspected for Federal recognition.

By the summer of 1947, organization was well under way and we were able to conduct our first period of field training. During this first year, although we did not go to Camp as units, but as individuals, we were able to bring 1300 men to Camp Ripley from Minnesota and 400 from North Dakota.

The greatest year of organization and recruiting occurred in 1947. During that year, the strength of the organization increased by leaps and bounds. Early in September, the Chief of the National Guard Bureau conducted a recruiting campaign that was known as Operation 88888. The actual figure of 88888 was the number of recruits to be enlisted in the National Guard of the United States. The "Vikings" came to the front and finished in reaching their quota as number seven (7) of all of the Divisions in the Union.

The summer of 1948, our troops went to the field training center at Camp Ripley with a strength of 5,300 officers and men from Minnesota that year, plus 759 at Camp Grafton, North Dakota; training by units proceeded in good style. We were honored by a visit by the Chief of Army Field Forces, General Jacob Devers, who expressed himself as well pleased with the training of the "Viking" Division and with the facilities that Camp Ripley offered. While the Vikings were in field training at Camp Ripley, the Congress passed the Selective Service Training Act, called for peacetime military training of selectees.

The Selective Service Act carried the provision that members of the National Guard in good standing were exempt from registration. There was involved a period of time of 10 days between the completion of legislation in the Congress and the signing of the bill into law by the President. This gave many young men an opportunity to enlist in the National Guard thereby discharging their obligation to their country in that manner, and when the bill was signed by the President on the 24th day of June 1948, our strength had again increased.

The year of 1949 saw the organization of the last unit of the "Viking" Division. In the meantime, training increased and strength increased, so that by the time field training rolled around, our strength was approximately 6,000 from Minnesota and 993 from North Dakota. The next year, North Dakota passed the 1,000 mark, sent 1,048 to Grafton.

We entered the year of 1950 with great plans for the Division since we had hopes of attaining greater strength, and also we were entering upon the third year of our training program. Suddenly, in April, we were again called upon to perform a state mission, that of assisting in time of civil disaster. Because of the cold winter and the continuing deluge of snowfall, the Red River Valley was the scene of a flood. The cities of Crookston and East Grand Forks were particularly inundated and again the National Guard came forth to do its part. With soldiers and supplies with trucks and with the use of DUKWS, we were able to rescue hundreds of families and thousands of cattle. This duty, beginning on the 24th of April, continued until the 25th of May.

Plans for the field training during the summer of 1950 departed from our normal plan to train in July since we were involved in a building program at Camp Ripley that would not be complete until August. Therefore, that being the determining factor, the training was set for the month of August.

On the 25th day of June 1950, the North Koreans made their march across the 38th parallel to invade South Korea. Two days later on the 27th, the President of the United States announced that as a member of the United Nations, we would protect South Korea with Naval support and Air support. This was to be done in our role of acting as a member of the United Nations.

Several days later, the President announced that the situation was rapidly becoming untenable and therefore, the use of United Nations' Army troops was authorized.

Within a few days, information was received that certain division and non-divisional units of the National Guard would be inducted into Federal Service.

On July 4th, we were asked to submit a complete and up-to-date report on the status of supplies of all major items. In August, a number of National Guard and Organized Reserve Units were alerted for induction into Federal Service.

During the fall of 1950, therefore, training was based on the assumption that the 47th Infantry Division would be inducted into Federal Service. There was no definite information, but foresight made practical planning toward that eventuality essential. Status of training was checked, showdown inspections were conducted and mobilization plans were rewritten while alert plans were rehearsed.

On the 9th and 10th of December, the Commanding General, Fifth Army, conducted a conference at Headquarters Fifth Army in Chicago. All National Guard and Organized Reserve Corps Division Staffs in the Army area participated and the problem presented for solution was that of mobilizing a division, moving it to a training Camp and beginning the training cycle. Little did we realize then how timely it all would be. At the conclusion of the conference, the Division Commander and Staff departed for St. Paul, arriving there at 0745 on Monday, the 11th of December. All returned to their respective businesses in civil life after another busy weekend as citizen soldiers expecting to spend the following weekend with their families. On Friday evening, the 15th of December at 5:45 P.M., the Division Commander, General Hendrickson, received a telephone call from a representative of the Associated Press. The representative said, "I understand your division has been alerted for induction into Federal Service. Do you have a comment?" The General replied, "No, only to say, I must be getting into a rut, this is the fourth time it has happened to me."

Immediately, of course, the Division Staff went into action to alert all units of the division and by midnight, all unit commanders were aware of the alert to be inducted on the 16th of January 1951.

Then followed a month of busy preparation that included a flying trip to the Office of the Chief of Army Field Forces at Fort Monroe, Virginia, by the Division Commander and his staff, a conference with officers from Headquarters Fifth Army and a conference of all organization commanders and their staffs.

There was much work to be done. All officers and men were to complete a final type physical examination. Papers were to be changed from National Guard forms to Army of the United States forms. Some men were to be discharged and others were enlisted.

Plans were perfected for the move of some 9,000 men as members of 105 units from 79 cities in Minnesota and North Dakota to Camp Rucker, Alabama. Most motor equipment was to go on its own wheels, with heavier equipment such as tanks and track vehicles by train and the majority of the personnel by train. In addition to the many vehicles that traveled by road, there were eight freight trains and twenty-seven passenger trains. So effective was the planning and so well executed was the plan that although the division was inducted on the 16th day of January, it was closed at Camp Rucker on the morning of the 27th of January with the exception of eleven planes of the Army Aviation Section that were weather bound at Nashville, Tennessee.

Then followed those busy days of improving barracks and living conditions, pre-cycle training and preparation for the arrival of men to fill our rolls to full strength plus.

On the 12th day of February, our first trainload of men—men called to the colors under the Selective Service Act—arrived from Fort Devens, Massachusetts. They were of all sizes, some with full uniforms, some with a half a uniform and some without any uniform. From that day on, they came by the hundreds, from every state in the Union, from the three territories and from the District of Columbia. When the last of them stepped from the train, we had processed and assigned to units 13,100 men in 22 days.

And so the 47th Infantry Division, an all-American outfit full of youth but backed by a lineage going all the way back to the Viking explorers, trains in 1951 to defend America and advance the cause of peace with justice in a world torn time and again by war.

The men of the 47th can draw strength from a study of the proud and courageous men who have wrought victory in all previous crises to which our nation has been called.

In the pages that follow, you will see these Vikings as they train and play. You will see them (including, in many cases, yourself and your barracks buddies) crawling through the infiltration course, deploying over the rolling Alabama terrain, carrying out their mission and learning their weapons, from rifles to tanks, from .30 caliber to 155 millimeter. You will see the specialized services practicing their support missions, the Engineers building bridges, Ordnance mending weapons and vehicles, Signal keeping communications in.

From barracks to bivouac and back again, from hometown to the maneuver phase, our training story as the modern Viking Division is here for all to see and be proud of. No narrative is necessary for this phase; these pictures speak for themselves.

INFANTRY
REGIMENT

COLONEL ROBERT P. MILLER
Commanding Officer, 136th Inf. Regt.

COLONEL MILLER began his Army Career as a private in the National Guard, February, 1928. Taking a competitive examination, 1st Lieutenant June 20, 1928, Captain in 1941, Major in 1942, and Lieutenant Colonel later the same year. During World War II he commanded the 1st Battalion, 135th Infantry Regiment, then part of the 34th Infantry Division. He led this unit through North Africa and on into Italy. After being wounded in the battle for the vital and now-famous Hill 609, he returned to the United States to complete his tour of duty as a staff member of The Infantry School. Colonel Miller left the service for a short time. But upon reactivation of the Minnesota National Guard, he took an active part in the reorganization of the 136th Infantry Regiment as Regimental Executive Officer and in February, 1949 assumed command of the Regiment and was promoted to Colonel. His home is in Appleton, Minnesota. In his early civilian life he attended the School of Dentistry at the University of Minnesota and later became a practicing dentist.

INFANTRY

COLONEL FRANK RICHARDS
Commanding Officer, 164th Inf. Regt.

COLONEL RICHARDS enlisted in the North Dakota National Guard in 1916. He served during the Mexican Border incident at Mercedes, Texas, in 1916. In 1918, he was recalled to active duty and served during World War I as a sergeant in a trench mortar battery.

Colonel Richards was again called back into military service in February, 1941. He spent the years from 1941 to 1943 with the 164th Infantry Regiment, commanding the First Battalion of the unit through the Guadalcanal campaign. He returned to the United States in 1943 and was stationed at the Replacement Training Center, Camp Blanding, Florida, until his discharge in March, 1946. The North Dakota militarist assumed command of the 164th Infantry Regiment in November of that year.

The colonel was born in 1899 in Dickenson, North Dakota. He graduated from the University of North Dakota at Grand Forks, receiving his B.A. degree in 1921 and his M.S. degree in 1932.

BRIGADIER GENERAL FRITZ A. PETERSON

Division Artillery Commander
47th Inf. Div.

B BRIGADIER GENERAL FRITZ A. PETERSON, Division Artillery Commander, 47th Infantry Division, enlisted in the Minnesota National Guard as a private in 1915, saw service on the Mexican Border in 1916, earned a commission as a Field Artillery Officer during World War I, and served with the 16th Field Artillery Regiment, 4th Infantry Division, in the AEF. In 1924, he was assigned to the 125th Field Artillery Regiment, Minnesota National Guard, and was inducted into active service as Executive officer of that unit in 1941. In 1942 he organized and commanded the 175th Field Artillery Battalion. During World War II he served as Division Artillery Commander and Division Artillery Executive officer, 34th Infantry Division, and as Artillery Executive officer of the 4th Army. On his return to civilian life he was selected as Division Artillery Commander of the newly-formed 47th Infantry Division. He was federally recognized as a Brigadier General September 16, 1946. Home address: Route 2, Anoka, Minnesota.
